I'm looking for a book I read in college for child psychology about a little girl who was violent and killed the school fish by plucking their eyes out with her pencil. No spark of color lit his eyes. I liked the author's writing though as it had a dose of humor and it did have recent scientific studies quoted. On the third day we woke early and the sky was filled with long clouds.

His suits were badly cut, with wide cuffs on his trousers; he was a shade away from

Free tickets to area performances. Warily Bilbo followed him, as he went along, cursing, and talking to himself about his 'precious'; from which talk at last even Bilbo guessed the truth, and hope came to him in the darkness: he himself had found the marvellous ring and a chance of escape from the orcs and from Gollum.
